

FRANKFORT MAN GETS NATIONAL JOB

Dog Warns of Fire But Perishes In The Flames

"Queenie" the big police dog owned by Peter Van Brussel, Tinley Park blacksmith, is a canine heroine today, but she lost her life in becoming a heroine.

Shortly past midnight Monday, Mrs. J. Ouhlman residing in the Stockman flats adjoining the blacksmith was aroused by the barking, cries and howls of the dog. Sensing that something was wrong, Mrs. Ouhlman raised the window shade and saw the shop was on fire. She aroused the other families in the building who began getting their household effects ready to move.

In the meantime someone else saw the blaze and set off the fire siren. At first residents and some of the firemen thought, that this being Halloween week, some boys had set off the siren, but they soon found the alarm was real.

The interior of the blacksmith shop was a roaring furnace and the flames leaping high into the sky lit up the surrounding country with their lurid glow.

At first the Tinley Park Fire Department feared the entire block was in danger and to be on the safe side, they asked the Orland Park Fire Department to stand by. The latter arrived promptly and stayed until any danger of the fire getting beyond control, was over. The blacksmith shop is located between the Goessel building occupied by the Siemens Implement Sales and also several flats this structure being located on the west side of the shop while directly east are the Stockman flats.

By very efficient and clever fire fighting all the buildings were saved and even the blacksmith shop was saved from total destruction, the north, west and south walls and the roof is still standing. The east wall was either burned or blown out.

There is only a small space between the buildings mentioned. The west wall of the Stockman building was badly charred and smoke stains along the eaves show where the fire had started to creep under the roof when checked. The fire men of both departments deserve much credit for their splendid work.

After the fire was extinguished, "Queenie" was found in her box in the rear of the shop, dead. Mr. Van Brussel was heart broken over the tragic death of his pet. Many Tinley residents and children also feel sorry that this noble canine who saved the neighbors from losing their homes, perished in the fire. It is thought that smoke and gas killed her before the fire reached her.

She was trained to stay and guard the shop and she lost her life by being faithful to her trust.

Police Chief C. A. Steinhagen said just as he stepped out of his car to enter his home, he heard a sudden explosion and at first thought someone was taking a pot shot at him, but within a few moments he, too, noticed the fire, the origin of which has not been determined.

Balloting to uphold the traditions of the free American way of life, Herschbach added, voters will mark their ballots in overwhelming numbers for Republican candidates who have proved their experience and their ability to serve with honesty, efficiency and loyalty.

Coming Election Has Political Insiders Guessing Again . . . Effect of Bus Speed Restrictions Debated . . .

Bell Syndicate—WNU Features.

WASHINGTON. — Though there are always upsets in nation-wide elections, the best opinions, obtainable here at the political hub, are that there will not be as many missing faces as an actual result of the election, when the next congress convenes, as there will be due to primaries and conventions.

In the senate, for instance, there are very few close contests in prospect. The Democrats are hoping to retire Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, and C. Wayland Brooks of Illinois, to private life. Privately they admit little hope of any other gain. The GOP is hoping to knock off Prentiss M. Brown of Michigan, Theodore F. Green of Rhode Island and Clyde L. Herring of Iowa.

But it is very difficult to find a Democrat who is willing to bet even money against either Lodge or Brooks. Similarly it is difficult to find Republicans willing to lay even money against Brown, Green or Herring.

Yet these are really the doubtful seats. True, there is the case of Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska, running independent again, but with the endorsement of President Roosevelt and no serious Democratic opposition. There might be a miracle which would put a Republican in that seat. It would seem about due, on the old doctrine of the pitcher which went to the well once too often.

Politics Always Perplexing

Massachusetts politics is always perplexing—and dubious. The administration is most anxious to beat young Lodge. He is too often embarrassing. He not only knows too much about the war, now since his service in North Africa, and also about domestic issues, but he has some of the smartest political advisers extant.

That is the reason the administration leaders persuaded Joe Casey, who had a sure Democratic district for his house seat, to make the try against Lodge.

Again the habits of voters over a lifetime will help Lodge. The Bay state ballot markers are used to having a Lodge and a Walsh in the senate. It is the normal thing.

In Illinois the administration has been anxious to beat "Curly" Brooks, and the Chicago Tribune, FDR's pet hate among newspapers, is just as anxious to re-elect him.

Brook's pre-Pearl Harbor record did not hurt him, apparently, in the primary, and his chances for the six year term seem better than fair.

Of all the senators who have survived the primaries and conventions the one in most danger from the election seems to be Prentiss Brown of Michigan, but the independent candidacy of Gerald Smith, old Huey Long and Father Coughlin lieutenant, gives even him a sporting chance.

Problem: How Will Bus Schedules Fare?

Time was when any governmental move to cramp the style of inter-city busses would have been hailed with loud cries of joy by the railroad executives.

But the railroad men are worried about the effects of the recent order which will hold the speed of all rubber-tired vehicles to 35 miles an hour. No one in either railroad or bus circles has figured out how to maintain present bus schedules at this reduced speed.

Busses making long runs between important cities have been accustomed to running more than 60 miles an hour whenever possible.

Despite this high rate of speed on the road, the schedule of most bus lines has not been too attractive when compared to the time of the better trains between the same points.

The inter-city bus runs as fast as a train on the good stretches of road, but it loses a lot of time going through city streets to its downtown terminals.

The competing train, running on its own right of way, with tunnels in two of those cities, and few grade crossings, gains an enormous time advantage.

As every passenger on a long cross country bus ride knows, the big loss of time is made at the stops. Where a train would stay in a station only a few minutes, the bus generally stops 15 minutes or longer. It has to make stops on long trips for the passengers to get food.

Few trains make any stops today for the convenience of its passengers.

All this adds up to a situation which, beginning on October 15, will put a heavy time penalty on the bus passenger.

Steal Two Calliopes, Engine Pipe Organ, Engine

BELLEVIEW, ILL. — John Francis reported as stolen from a warehouse, two steam calliopes, a pipe organ, one truck engine and several tires and wheels.

U. S. Puts Touch On a Panhandler

And Sells Him $683 Worth Of War Bonds.

NEW YORK.—Harry Engberg is a little man who likes to get something for nothing. He walked into a bakery and asked for a loaf of bread.

"Look," he said to the clerk, "I got two small boys home. I need it. Trust me."

The clerk didn't trust; a few words led to an argument and a policeman was called. Engberg went to court for panhandling.

"What's that?" asked the court, pointing to a paper shopping bag.

"Money . . . $683," said the arresting officer, "all of it in old gold-backed bills and silver dollars. The treasury people are coming up to see him now."

"How much money did you have?" the court asked Engberg.

"I had a little—maybe 10 cents," Engberg replied.

"How much?" the court repeated.

"Maybe 50 cents," said Engberg.

"You may not like it, but you're going to get $10 or five days," said the magistrate.

"I'll pay," Engberg said.

Two treasury agents stepped up.

"I don't trust banks," said Engberg, hesitatingly.

"That's all right," said one agent, "you're going to make a very sound investment."

And he did—$683 worth of war bonds.

Pilot Downed in Jungle, Unfed 6 Days, Hikes Back

SOMEWHERE IN THE SOUTHWEST PACIFIC. — Lieut. Duncan Soffern of Manawa, Wis., reached this advanced operational base after a 70-mile hike through dense jungles in an incessant tropical downpour, during which he went six days without food.

He was the pilot of a plane lost in New Guinea recently. His crew bailed out of the plane with him and three have returned to their base.

"I came down in a thick bush with only my revolver, a pocket compass and a bottle of aspirins," he said. "It was raining heavily so I broke the bottle, cut the center of my parachute and made a tent, then pushed on south until I found a stream."

"I followed the stream to a large river, which took me to the sea. It was a good six days before I found a native village and got some food—one banana. I had to cross three steep mountains but I met a patrol officer and he gave me some food."

D. A. R. Elm Becomes A Blooming Cherry Tree

RALEIGH, N. C.—Some years ago Daughters of the American Revolution planted on North Carolina's Capital square, with elaborate ceremony, a little tree purported to be an offspring of the "Continental Elm" planted at Cambridge, Mass., by Gen. George Washington.

The little "elm" has grown up—but it's blooming, and State Forester J. S. Holmes identified the bloom as cherry blossoms.

Frank J. Ryan, secretary of state, replied that they should forget about a rebate.

"Just consider it worth the price that you got away from the skunks before they did you any damage," he advised them.

Conan Doyle Find Excites Interest Of Holmes Fans

Unpublished Mystery Yarn Is Unearthed Among Author's Documents in London.

LONDON.—"Most astounding, my dear Holmes!"

That probably would have been the reaction of faithful Dr. Watson to the revelation from the family of the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle that an unpublished Sherlock Holmes story had been discovered among some of the dusty old papers left by the noted writer when he died 12 years ago.

The comment of the millions of devotees who have devoured every one of the Sherlock Holmes stories will probably be much more vocal, however, when they learn of the decision of Conan Doyle's son not to publish the new discovery.

The story, "The Man Who Was Wanted," was found by the author's son, Adrian Conan Doyle, in an old chest among ancient family papers—many of which pre-dated Sir Arthur.

On the envelope in which the manuscript was discovered, was a note in the writing of the author's wife, saying that he did not intend to have the story published because he did not consider it up to the standard set by the others in the Sherlock Holmes series.

Son Opposes Release.

"It is not up to scratch," said his son, "and my father didn't want to run the risk of disappointing his admirers by putting out a story that he felt did not come up to par."

Hesketh Pearson, biographer of Thomas Hardy, who is preparing a life of Sir Arthur, agreed that the story was "very feeble" and said Sir Arthur showed "good common sense" in withholding it from publication since it might have injured the reputation of the famous detective of Baker street.

The opening scenes of the story in Holmes' quarters, said Mr. Pearson, are "quite as good as anything that Conan Doyle did, but the plot is weak."

The story, which runs six to seven thousand words, concerns the problem of finding a business executive who disappeared when he got into financial difficulties.

With Dr. Watson in amazed attendance, Holmes solves the case by the simple expedient of showing a photograph of the man to friends, neighbors and enemies and making those "remarkable, my dear sir," deductions from their reactions.

To Be Preserved.

Mr. Pearson, for the past year has been studying Sir Arthur's writings, visiting his acquaintances and studying his ancestry and heredity in preparation for writing the new biography. It was while Sir Arthur's son was working with him in sorting out and studying his father's papers that the unpublished manuscript was discovered.

The existence of the story had not even been suspected prior to its discovery. Adrian has "very definite" plans for preserving the story despite the fact that it may never see print.

"I realize," the son explained, "that there may be a great demand from Sherlock Holmes admirers to have the story published. In that case the family might consent. I cannot say definitely, however, until my elder brother, Dennis Conan Doyle, returns from America."

The story was written several years before Sir Arthur died, but the state of the paper would indicate, his son said, that it was not among the last of his Sherlock Holmes stories.

Blind Judge Decides Deaf Mute Is Innocent

BUTTE, MONT.—A deaf mute was arraigned before blind Justice of the Peace D. F. Shea on a burglary charge.

The defendant wrote out his "not guilty plea, and the town constable read it to the sightless judge. The judge questioned the deaf mute by asking his questions of the bailiff, who wrote out the questions and read the written answers to the jurist.

After a sizable crowd of city hall employees had gathered to watch the unusual proceeding, the jurist decided the deaf mute was not guilty and released him.

Ice Cream Goes Off Menu Of U. S. Army in Britain

LONDON.—Ice cream was taken off the menu at United States army camps in the British Isles because of a ministry of food ruling that ice cream manufacturing is a non-essential industry.

The ministry estimated the ban would save 30,000 tons of transport and 1,000 tons of paper a year.

The United States army agreed to do without ice cream after the manufacturers, appealing the ministry's ruling, said they had to continue in operation to fill the needs of the United States forces.

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—Mrs. Verda Bennett had only one husband to give to the army, but she even swore him into the service. When her husband, First Lieut. Fred T. Bennett, joined the army, Mrs. Bennett, a notary public, gave him the oath of office.

Halloween Was First Celebrated By Inhabitants of Rural Sections

Thanksgiving for Good Crops Offered by Early Man.

By CLIFF LANGE
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Halloween is essentially and basically a rural celebration.

It belongs to the country-side, the small town where the people are close to the earth, and all that comes from and lives upon the earth.

Far back in history, man, realizing that summer was done and the work of nature, busy all the previous months, was at an end, held religious ceremonies to thank the gods

ORIGIN OF THE NAME
November 1 is All Saints' day, also called All-Hallows, or All Hallows. The evening preceding this day is All-halloween.

for sending him food upon which to live.

To early man, Nature, with all its blessings and woes, was something of a mystery to him. As he became more familiar with it and more civilized through the centuries, he had certain gods as guardians of his crops. When the crops were collected, and the cattle gathered in, he then held his celebration with his family and with friends.

This was the beginning of our present day celebration of Halloween. Many of the wild spirits in which early man believed are reflected in the witches riding brooms, the goblins with their fearful faces that decorate Halloween parties wherever they are held.

Primitive man's basic spirit of thankfulness for favors done by the ruler of all nature through religious celebrations and ceremonies was continued by the Druids of England, the early Romans, and even the Indians of the United States.

In the pre-Christian days of early England, the Druids, priests of ancient Britain, celebrated the feast of Samhain on November 1. At that time the flocks were driven in and the workers of the community rested from their arduous summertime labors.

But before midnight on October 31 the Druids put out the old fire on the altar of their god, Baal, and made a new one. This signified the beginning of another year of work with Nature by those early ruralites who worshiped before the heathen god Baal.

In the early Roman festival of Pomona, held at harvest time, fruits and nuts played a very important part. How the customs of the early Roman religious festival have come down to the present day is noticed in the giving of fruits and nuts to youngsters who go "visiting" on Halloween.

There also is a definite reason for pumpkins—always a necessary ornament, either real or artificial—having a definite place in any Halloween decoration.

The reason is not difficult to understand. The early Indians combined deep solemnity and hearty relaxation at their harvest time celebration, held around the present time of Hal-

A Halloween Wish

"Let's see now, where was I? Oh, yes. Phone Janey after this man takes my picture and ask her if she has some extra bobby pins. I wish he would hurry up. I'm getting tired of sitting here holding this pumpkin. It isn't heavy, but the heat from the light in it is hot. I wish those people who see this picture have a happy Halloween. I know I will." (That's Ellen Drew, in case you haven't recognized her.)

loween. The Indians of the Southeast and Northeast United States placed the pumpkin in a conspicuous spot during their celebrations because it was a staple article of their diet.

Many people have further seen a definite relation between the hollowed, decorated and lighted pumpkin in homes on Halloween with the ceremonial dances and masques of the Hopi Indians held in the Southwest at harvest time.

In fact, almost all the early American—rather, native American—foodstuffs grown by the early Indians and given proper appreciation during their harvest celebrations are today noticed in Halloween decorations. Corn is one of the outstanding foodstuffs so displayed.

The priests of early Christianity found it difficult to stamp out the mystery and symbolism of the last night of October. They effected a compromise between the old religious ceremonies of the Romans and Druids and those essentially Christian. To offset the black magic of Druid superstitions, the next day was declared All Saint's day (as it still is today) and the evening preceding it was renamed hallowed or holy evening.

The corruption of the name, by constant usage by the untutored natives, came to be Halloween.

But the new name could not change the character of the festi-

Just waiting for a train, boys. That's all. She's been invited over to the next town's Halloween celebration given for the benefit of the USO. Isn't it a far cry from the days when witches were in style instead of be-witching beauties such as she? Who said, "The good old days"?

val. To those back hundreds of years ago, and continuing on down through the centuries, Halloween has always remained, both seriously and humorously, as a time when supernatural influences prevailed.

Through the years the religious significance of the eve has all but disappeared. But the picture of witches riding their brooms across the harvest fields with the full, bright moon in the background has stayed with us.

And speaking of witches it should be remembered that it hasn't been so very long ago that here in the United States they were considered by many to be harmful old women under the diabolic control of the master Evil One, the Devil.

In New England during 1691-92, when an outburst of fanaticism took place there, hundreds of persons were thrown in jail for either being witches, or consorting with them. In the summer of 1692, 19 persons were tried in court, convicted and hanged for witchcraft.

Today the emotion, the spirit of thankfulness which the early peoples expressed in their harvest ceremonies on Halloween has been all but forgotten.

Today the same power which brought good crops and healthy stock to the early dwellers, brings not only plenty for this nation, but also for those nations battling with us, the Evil One of Europe who is riding the witch's broom of cruelty and hate, but who will, when the magical words of freedom are spoken, crash to earth destroying himself and the evil spirits that have been consorting with him.

There will be a poignant touch to those who will celebrate Halloween this year in the United States, re-

John Gay, the early English poet (1688-1732), wrote the following lines of poetry which reflected a superstition of his day concerning the Halloween festival:

At even o' Halloweenas no sleep I sought,
But to the field a bag of hempseed brought,
I scattered round the seed on every side,
And three times three in trembling accents cried,
"This hempseed with my virgin hand I sow,
Who shall my true love be, the crop shall show."

This poem, as does the accompanying story, further brings out the fact that Halloween is essentially a rural festival.

Who, Me?

Hoot Owl is a patient animal he is, he is. All year long he doesn't do anything but sleep all day, work all night catching mice and other delicacies that tickle his palate. Then, come Halloween, he gets himself all prettied up to have his picture taken. From the looks of him you wouldn't believe that he has been sitting like that for ten days. Before that he was resting in a storeroom with other stuffed animals. Oh, well! What would Halloween be without an owl?

Editor Shows How

In southwestern Missouri the merchants of a progressive small town dreaded the approach of Halloween as much as the kids happily anticipated it.

The police officials, school teachers, and principals were perplexed, too, as to how they could stop the damage, even though light, inflicted by the masked kids as they trooped about the streets on the night of October 31.

The editor of the local weekly was giving thought to the matter, too. The editor was still a comparatively young man. He remembered some of his youthful Halloween pranks all too well. It was a different situation now, he realized.

Suddenly he got a brilliant idea. He talked to the members of the town's business club about it.

In the next edition of the editor's newspaper was a large ad offering an attractive money prize by the towns' merchants to the young person who drew the most attractive, artistic picture on any of the merchants' store windows with soap on Halloween.

Result? Damage dropped off to a minimum; many fine pictures drawn; one youth the proud possessor of the money prize; much publicity for the town, the business men—and the editor.

Hobble My Goblins!

Keep your eye on the pumpkins. Then you will remember it's Halloween again. No, the second girl on the right doesn't mind you of anyone but movie actress Eva Gabor. Those you see (left to right) acting as though they're scared are Barbara Britton, Katharine Booth, Eva, and Ella Neal.

It's always warm at Halloween time where they work. That's why they haven't put on fur coats.

THE Secret OF THE MARSHBANKS

• BY KATHLEEN NORRIS •

©NORRIS W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY SO FAR: Charlotte (Cherry) Rawlings, an orphan at Saint Dorothea's convent school since she was seven, knows almost nothing of her early history but has gradually realized that like other girls at the school she has no family. She questions whether she has the right to her father's name. Judge Judson Marshbanks and Emma Haskell, housekeeper for wealthy Mrs. Porteous Porter in San Francisco are her guardians. When Cherry is twenty Emma gets her a secretarial job with Mrs. Porter but goes first to the Marshbanks mansion, meeting the judge's young wife, Fran, and his rich niece, Amy, daughter of his brother Fred, now dead. Life at Mrs. Porter's becomes monotonous, and Cherry is thrilled when Kelly Coates, an artist, sends her a box of candy. She is jealous when he brings Fran to a party at Mrs. Porter's. Emma tells Cherry that her sister Charlotte was Cherry's mother. Kelly takes Cherry along so Fran can visit his studio and Cherry senses that he is very much in love with Fran, but soon he tells Cherry despondently that Fran has promised the judge she will not see him any more. Mrs. Porter dies, leaving Cherry $1,500 and she learns from Marshbanks that his brother, Fred, who was Amy's father, was also her father. Cherry, much pressed, phones Kelly, who takes her to his studio and comforts her. They agree to cheer each other up. She decides to go to Stanford University and the judge suggests she live at Palo Alto with a Mrs. Pringle. As Fran is driving her there, Fran says, "Cherry, I wonder if you will do something for me."

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER X

"Mother, I didn't know Miss Rawlings was here! How do you do? Are you hungry? What could I offer you?" said George Pringle.

"How were you ex-er?" asked the mother.

"Repulsive," said Rebecca Pringle calmly. Cherry laughed and Rebecca smiled at Cherry and they immediately liked each other. "It was all stuff he'd never dreamed of mentioning to us before," said Rebecca. "But I think I hit some of it. You've been up to school?" she asked the visitor. "You haven't? Then I'll tell you what we'll do; we'll take a run up there now, and I'll show you 'round."

"Oh, but you're tired! I wouldn't think—"

"I'd love it," Rebecca, whose manner was goddesslike in its serenities, said pleasantly. She and Cherry went out to a battered open two-seater at the gate and were immediately engulfed in a town full of small cars from which students dangled hilariously.

The college buildings were set in long cloisters and flower-edged lawns. When they stopped at the co-operative store, boys swarmed about the car and Rebecca introduced them, and Cherry could talk of classes she wanted to visit and of coaching in a group that was thoroughly absorbed in the same interests.

Altogether when they went back to the Pringle house and sat on the steps in real small-town fashion, Cherry was half intoxicated with happiness and anticipation, and felt that of all the changing phases of her life this one promised her the most contentment and the most to which to look forward.

She had telephoned Kelly only once in her life; she thought she might telephone him legitimately to night, making an appointment to tell him of her good fortune. Although she put in the call immediately upon reaching home and waited for it until ten o'clock, the number was reported as not answering, and somewhat chilled, she abandoned the idea.

However, two weeks later when Easter vacations were over and she was conscientiously visiting classes, and studying dutifully with a coach who had been recommended, she had a telegram from him that sent her spirits to the skies.

"Coming home from Carmel Sunday morning. Can I pick you up for picnic at Topocate at about ten? Love, Kelly," read the message. Cherry could not answer it but she was ready and waiting when he stopped the battered old car at the gate, and when she settled herself beside him she would not have changed places with any woman in the world.

"Goody!" she said.

"Why 'goody'?"

"Because you're alone."

"Who'd you think I was bringing?"

"No one special. But it's more fun to be alone."

"I've been a little too much alone," he said. "I came down for the Rasmussen wedding, and then went on to Carmel and painted cypresses and rocks."

"When—" She felt a prick of sick premonition. "When was the Rasmussen wedding?" she asked, with a slight quiver in her voice.

"Two weeks ago—two weeks ago Wednesday. Alice Rasmussen is the closest friend I have, you know. She's a peach. It was a small home affair; no fuss. Her brother must be fifty and the bride looked about that, and Stan wanted me for his best man. So I stayed there a couple of days—I was bluer than indigo anyway—and then went on down to Carmel."

"Then you saw Fran," Cherry stated rather than asked, with the bright day going dark about her.

"Fran?" His amazed eyes gave her a side glance. "How d'you mean?"

Cherry leaned against the rough homespun shoulder of Kelly's coat and listened dreamily although this talk was mostly about Fran.

"She brought me down to the Pringles' to make arrangements and things. That was on Thursday, two weeks ago."

"I didn't know Fran was there!" He was honestly astonished. "Did she come to see Alice Rasmussen?"

"Well, maybe she didn't." Again Cherry must stand corrected about Fran. Instantly the solution occurred to her. Fran had learned in some way that Kelly was there, that by an extraordinary accident he was the Rasmussens' guest. And she had determined to avoid him.

Perhaps she had made her other call first and someone there had happened to mention him. Whatever she had done, Cherry knew she could believe Kelly now, for his consternation at the thought of her having been so near and his having missed her was unmistakably genuine.

This might be her chance to speak to him of Fran.

"Maybe she didn't want to see you, Kelly. Maybe she thought it would be no use," she offered timidly.

"I haven't any illusions as to its being any use, if by 'it' you mean my feeling for her," he answered decisively, almost savagely, and there was a silence. After a moment or two he said that he was sorry to be so rude, and they talked by rather awkward degrees of other things until they were at ease again.

But the morning's gala mood was hard to recapture, and Cherry felt something lacking in the beginning of the day. The bridge and the Sausalito hills were wreathed and buried in fog; the picnic turned itself into a house party. Three or four friends had been asked to lunch with Kelly, all bringing picnic contributions far more suited to the woods or the beach than to the living room.

Cherry's cheeks glowed; more than once the others smiled to hear her ringing laughter.

"Oh, Kelly," she said ingenuously when they were back beside the fire again, "it's such glorious fun here! Why can't we all stay here always?"

"All right by me," Kelly said, busy with drinks.

"It seems so horrible to go out again into the fog!"

"We'll give you girls the bedroom," Kelly arranged it, "and we can go over to the studio and bunk there."

"Oh, no!" Cherry turned a flushed face toward the room. "I was only fooling. I have to be at Judge Marshbanks' for dinner."

"We have to go. We'll take you over," said little Mrs. Wilcox.

"No. I'm responsible," Kelly told them. "I brought her here and I'll see that she gets back safely."

Cherry leaned against the rough homespun shoulder of Kelly's coat and listened dreamily although this talk was mostly about Fran.

She was deliciously tired after the long day in the open air. She thought how she loved him, and how proud she would be to belong here, in the front seat of his car, resting against him.

They reached the Marshbanks house only too soon for her, and she said good night and ran up the steps.

Cherry found a comfortable robe, slippers and a nightgown laid out for her. She was anticipating the comfort of an hour's rest and reading before Amy arrived when there was a knock at her door.

A little puzzled, she said "Come in," her heart leaping with irrational terror when the invitation was accepted by old Mrs. Marshbanks, the formidable woman who was her grandmother and Amy's.

"I hoped I'd find you alone, Miss Rawlings. I wanted to speak to you," Dora Marshbanks said. She advanced to a deep chair, seated herself and by a slight inclination of her head indicated that Cherry was also to be seated.

"I don't know whether you know," the older woman began, with a steady look, "how definitely I object to your presence in this house. You should know, for I've asked my son to speak to you of it but I have no idea that he has carried out my wishes up to this time."

For a few seconds the words did not seem to make sense to Cherry; their shocking import reached her, in all its deadly simplicity and she felt her throat thicken and her hands grow cold.

"Or has he done so?" demanded Mrs. Marshbanks.

"He—he—No," was all Cherry could feebly stammer.

"I thought he hadn't. I thought even the least sensitive person would hardly come here after any suggestion from him. I am no longer the mistress of this house," said the old lady, in a sort of cold passion, "but I am not a cipher yet! I am asking you civilly not to make it a habit to come here."

Cherry sat staring at her in a fascinated horror of silence.

"You know your own history," said the inflexible voice. "You know why your presence here is an insult to decency and to me. I bitterly regret the circumstances that have given you what you seem to consider a right to regard yourself as a daughter of the house!"

"I am a daughter of the house!" Cherry answered, her own words surprising her as much as they could possibly have surprised her companion.

"How dare you say that!" Mrs. Marshbanks said sharply. "You have absolutely no claim. You have been well established in life; you are being cared for now. Be careful that you don't lose even what you have!"

"I am not afraid of losing it, and I am not afraid of you!" said Cherry, at white heat. "I will come to this house as long as Amy and Fran and the judge want me! I wish you would go out of my room! I am sorry that any blood of yours runs in my veins!"

"And you think you can go on with your college work, be asked about in good society, once your history is known?" the older woman demanded, rising. "You think that Amy will continue to think you the most charming friend in the world once she knows that you are her half sister, that you are the living reminder of her father's weakness and immorality. I think you won't risk that. I think you'll realize that only you can keep your own people from being disgraced in the eyes of the world. Your own father and your mother too, you know."

"Your own son!" cried Cherry. "What about Fran's own son?" Amy asked, coming in from her room, tired and cold and blown after her long ride. "What's Uncle Jud done? Why, what's...?" She looked in amazement and concern from one face to the other. "What is it?" she asked. "What were you saying about Uncle Jud?"

There was a silence while the three looked at one another. It seemed to Cherry to last for a long, long time.

"There we stood like statues," Cherry said, telling Kelly about it a few weeks later, "until I thought we must all be frozen! Amy knew something was horribly wrong, and she kept asking 'What is it? What is it?' and old Mrs. Marshbanks was sort of panting, and she wouldn't say anything, and I couldn't. And finally Amy said: 'I know it's about uncle, because I heard Cherry say so!'"

"You hadn't said so?" Kelly was lying face down in the fresh, deep grass now, biting a blade thoughtfully; he looked up at her. The sun was sinking. Below the hill where Cherry and Kelly were sitting were the lake and the college buildings and beyond them the roofs of Palo Alto.

"No, I hadn't said a word about the judge, but I had said 'your son' and Amy heard that!" Cherry answered. "That's the whole trouble! That old fend—that old inquisitor—had told me that if I didn't break off my friendship with Amy, she'd tell everyone who I was—who I am, and I said that would mean her son was in it too!"

"You meant that wouldn't help her family reputation much?" Kelly asked with a faint smile.

THE CHRISTIAN VIEW OF MARRIAGE

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 2:18-24; Matthew 19:3-6; John 2:1-5.
GOLDEN TEXT—Marriage is honorable in all.—Hebrews 13:4.

The home is not just one of the institutions of our social order, it is a part of God's plan for man. It thus holds a position of greater importance than institutions of society, and should take first place in our thinking.

Home and the life which centers in it has lost much of its meaning and value in recent decades. It is appropriate and timely to study for four weeks in our Sunday schools the foundation principles of the home and to learn how we may hinder or help it in its influence. Teachers will wish to make much of this vital series.

We begin right when we inquire what the Bible teaches about marriage, and we find the instruction plentiful and to the point. Concerning marriage we learn of

I. Its Origin—Ordained by God (Gen. 2:18-24).

Nations and states have marriage laws, and certain civil requirements must be met. But true marriage from the Christian viewpoint is far more than a civil contract. It is an ordinance which God Himself ordained from the beginning for the welfare of man.

As Adam gave names to the animals (which, incidentally, tells of his intelligence and ability) they passed before him. It became evident to him that there was no true fellowship between man and beast, that there must be a "help meet" for man, one of his own kind, with his capacities of personal being.

God quickly and adequately meets every real need of man, so He created out of Adam's own flesh one who was to be his true companion. "If man is the head, she is the crown," said Matthew Henry. "The man was dust refined, the woman was dust doubly refined, one move further from the earth. She was not taken out of his head to top him, not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved."

So God ordained marriage, but down through the ages man has seen fit to tamper with God's holy arrangements, adjusting them to suit himself, so we need to be reminded of the truth.

II. Its Control—Not Subject to Man (Matt. 19:3-6).

Because of the hardness of man's heart Moses permitted divorce (Mark 10:4, 5), but God did not intend it from the beginning. The Jewish rabbis had so stretched the interpretation of that act of Moses that a wife could be divorced for almost any reason. The same was true among heathen nations.

Our Lord makes it very clear that man has no authority to determine such matters at all, that the union of life in true marriage is by the act of God, and that no man has power to sunder such a relationship.

The whole trend of thought on marriage has been away from its sacredness as a divine institution, and we need to return to a proper appreciation of it as such. All too often, marriages are mere civil agreements, hastily made before a justice of peace. We need to encourage our young people to recognize

III. Its Dignity—Sanctioned by Christ (John 2:1-5).

The wedding ceremony tells us that marriage "is an honorable estate, instituted by God in the time of man's innocence, confirmed by the teaching and hallowed by the presence of our blessed Lord, and likened by St. Paul to the holy union that exists between Christ and the Church; and therefore is not by any to be entered into unadvisedly, but reverently, discreetly and in the fear of God."

At the very beginning of His public ministry Jesus performed His first miracle as His share of a wedding feast. It is true that He does share every occasion of joy and sorrow of His people, but it seems to be significant that this first occasion for His miraculous power was a wedding.

He was there to rejoice with and to bless those who had exchanged their vows in marriage. Should He not be the unseen guest at every wedding? Whether in the home or in the church; whether the occasion be a simple or an elaborate one; whether a host of friends attend or only the witnesses—always and everywhere Jesus Christ should be recognized as the One who stands by to bless, and to unite the two lives for His own glory.

This means that the ceremony should be a Christian one, with prayer a vital part of it, and the will of God paramount. Then indeed, God may and will join together that which no man can put asunder

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON MEAT RATIONING

Q.—I see that my 2½ pound weekly meat ration includes the bone. Does it include my butcher's hand?

A.—There may be some way to keep your butcher's fist out of it, but it will take more than a global war.

Q.—The government says that if I have dinner in a restaurant and order a steak I should deduct its weight from my home quota. How can I weigh a steak in a restaurant?

A.—This is a complicated matter. In some restaurants the average weight of a steak is about two ounces including the plate, knife and fork. If you are lucky enough to know a restaurant that serves a real steak the waiter will give you the weight. Or you can use this formula: Let "X" equal the appetite; let "B" equal the steak and let "W" equal the price quoted on the menu. You then get the number of square feet in each room and divide by the storm windows.

Q.—Suppose some friends invite me to their home for dinner and serve roast beef. I take a second helping. Do I have to deduct this from my home ration of meat or just write it off under the heading of good neighbors?

A.—You're going to cause trouble if you try to weigh the portions served by any host.

Q.—Mr. Wickard says that there are plenty of meat products that are not rationed. He lists these as kidneys, brains and hearts. How can I learn to eat those things?

A.—Dark glasses and plenty of mustard will help.

Q.—Sausages and frankfurters are not to be rationed. Why?

A.—It would seem to prove what we have always contended: Whatever is in them, it isn't meat.

Q.—Why is it all right to eat plenty of chicken?

A.—There is plenty of chicken because it is seldom served in the army, due to the fact that the officers take everything but the neck. It is rarely offered in the navy because of a belief that it is just as well not to let sailors know there is a food other than beans.

Q.—What is the situation about eggs?

A.—There is or will be a ceiling on eggs, which, after all, is preferable to eggs on the ceiling. The hens have had a pretty good year. They were late learning about the war and didn't worry.

Q.—What about Tootsy? That's my airdale. I've had him eight years and he has developed a habit of getting at the meat before I can reach it myself. He is very intelligent and there is no use trying to kid him by saying: "Sit up and beg and mummy will give you a herring." Last Tuesday he bit the letter carrier. Today he bit the milkman and two neighbors. The next thing you know he may cause a national calamity by biting a Gallop Poll taker.

A.—It would seem up to all callers to wear leggings.

Elmer Twitchell says he favors an immediate second front but questions whether Wilkie is in shape for it yet.

"Lost—Brooch blue, with lady's head inserted. 107 Curtis street, Bloomfield."—Newark News.

Something from New Guinea, no doubt.

Since the announcement that no provision will be made for any meat for house pets, nobody can charge any longer that this administration is going to the dogs.

A New York woman turned her automobile over in the old metal collection. Elmer Twitchell says he could have done it with his jalopy long ago, as ever so many people told him it was just junk.

The meat shortage is going to be a little tough on the lunch-room men who have for years been substituting veal for chicken in chicken pie.

Ed Nugent, PFC

Dear Friends:

Well, now I am in Ohio at Lockbourne Field. This is a great improvement over Camp Ripley. Up there we slept in tents, and here we have barracks. The people are not as nice here as they were in Minnesota. I guess that is because there are so many people here. It is pretty hard to get in or out of camp here, so a pass is really a fine thing to have.

I have been getting the T. P. Times right along, and it sure is good to know what is going on at home. Thank you very much and thanks also for the smokes and razor blades.

I was made a Corporal and now I am a Sergeant. I think that is as far as I can go until the war is over, but that is OK with me. Everybody that came up with me from Arkansas has been given a rating. It seems we had more intensive training than the rest of the boys in our outfit. I am called M. P. Sgt. of Motorized. In other words, if there is a disturbance or attack on the post, it is my duty to run out with a couple of truck loads of fighting M. P.s and clear it up. We are doing much at present, but that is because we have all our equipment yet.

I don't know where I'll be stationed yet, but I do wish they would hurry up and do something.

My new address is: Sgt. Frederick Willman, Jr., ASN 16097868, Army Air Base, Lockbourne Field, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. Army.

Well thanks again for every thing, and please forgive me for not writing sooner.

I remain,

Freddy

GET A ROOF THAT CAN "Take it!"

MOST roofs have been leaking for 3 or 4 years before the damage reaches the stage where water marks show on the plaster.

Once the damage reaches that stage, the cost of repairs to plaster and household articles is always more than what it would have cost to have re-roofed in time.

Here's a simple test you yourself can make: after the next hard rain, go up in your attic and look at the roof-boards. If they are wet in spots, watch out for leaks sooner or later. To be completely safe against leaks, you should have your home re-roofed at once.

Logan-Long Asphalt Shingles are best for re-roofing. They are applied right over the old roof quickly and economically. We will be glad to show you these tested and approved asphalt shingles without obligation.

Forecast Rep. Victory

Fred E. Busbey in the final week of his campaign to represent the Third Congressional District predicted a rousing Republican Victory not only in his District but through out the Nation. Mr. Busbey pledged to the people to continue to wage the same fight he has continuously fought in the past 21 years for national defense and Americanism, to expound on the floors of Congress and to fight for the views of his constituents and at the end of the war to work untiringly for a peace program that will forever prevent another world war. This Victory will come he said "because the people are not complacent, but thoroughly aroused, with fervor for winning the war, and against the continuation of politics in Washington and the gearing of the war effort to insure the perpetuation of the New Deal; against withholding facts and actual misrepresentation of our successes and reverses. The people can take it and want the news as it occurs only subject to necessary military and naval censorship. The people realize that an all out effort can be secured only by returning to the two party system of government. The right of franchise is a privilege as well as a duty. Our forefathers fought for it and the time is passed when we can afford to regard their sacrifice so lightly as to fail to vote. It is the only way we can choose men of unflinching character and high integrity who will banish the rubber stamp and vote to preserve our constitutional form of government and our American way of life; men who are pledged immediately upon the cessation of hostilities to restore to the people and to the various sovereign States the powers which have been granted the Executive during the war.

By casting our vote for good government on November 3rd, we can all participate in the sweeping victory which is in our grasp, and thus assure a speedy return to normal government, the American way of life and world peace after victory.

Winding Up Campaign With Whirlwind Speeches

Country towns candidates for county commissioner on the Republican slate are making final whirlwind speaking appearances in various parts of the County every evening. These men, well known to citizens of the cities, towns and villages outside Chicago, include Comm. William Busse, Mt. Prospect, candidate for president of the Board as well as member; Comms. George A. Miller, Oak Park, George F. Nixon, Glenview; Wm. N. Erickson, Evanston and John Mackler, Chicago Heights.

Mr. Busse veteran of public service, and former president of the county board declares that after all these years, the country towns of Cook County with their ever growing populations, civic minded residents and high type local governments, deserves the presidency of the county board. When I am elected, I pledge to clean up the deep financial mess into which the Kelly Nash machine has pushed the county and to see to it that the county welfare institutions such as Oak Forest, the county hospital and juvenile home do not suffer from lack of support. I also pledge to cut payrolls to the bone in patronage stuffed offices. When I left as president some years ago, the county owed no bills, had a surplus in the treasury. Now the Democrats have run up $9,000,000 in unpaid bills. We must save Cook County from bankruptcy."

Comm. Erickson, veteran of the last war, is replying to the charge made by Mayor Edw. J. Kelly and other Democrats that "to vote for a Republican is unpatriotic."

How infamous for a man who skipped going to the last war to brand Republicans in that way, he says. Why, Comm. Busse has 23 grandsons, grandnephews or nephews in the service right now. Comm. Nixon has a son in service, Comm. Miller a son-in-law serving. Mr. ler has both a son and a son in law in the service and I was a sailor in the last war.

The Chicago Bar Association reports that 20 cents of every tax dollar represents a tax assessment levied on You because the taxes on so many delinquent properties, mostly within Chicago proper, are never paid. We need to place a legal tax rate limitation, a ceiling on taxes, and then collect all taxes levied. Then we could lower the tax levy rate, and yet get proper revenue to operate local governments.

Over 200 women who are members of the Citizens Committee for Wm. Busse, Republican candidate for president of the Cook county Board, met the candidate and other leaders at a tea at Hotel LaSalle, Wednesday, October 29th in the Illinois room. Distinguished guests included Gov. and Mrs. Dwight Green, Sen. C. Wayland Brooks, Mrs. Jacob Baur, Mrs. Frederik T. Upton, Mrs. Amy H. Berry, chairman and Rep. Bernice T. Van der Vries of Winnetka.

Throw Out Incompetents Says Rep. Party Head

"Throw out the incompetents", Quit playing politics with the war. Use our best brains as well as our best energies. Win the war quickly. End uncertainty.

"These are some of the reactions of good Americans, encountered by those who have been making a coast to coast analysis of the political situation; an analysis that indicates a strong Republican trend, North, South, East and West, said Frank Gannett, Assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee today.

This painstaking survey, just completed, he said indicates beyond reasonable doubt that the Republicans on November 3 will gain a minimum of 35 seats in the House of Representatives. The ground swell that will sweep many a New Dealer out of office certainly will give the Republicans the advantage in close, but doubtful districts. It is entirely possible that the Democratic majority may be wiped out.

This pronounced trend, Mr. Gannett explained, is due to unrest, deep concern, even alarm among the people. They feel that up to now Washington has been losing the war; that our war preparations have not been intelligently planned nor efficiently carried out.

The bewildering, contradictory directives and pronouncements issuing from government offices in Washington have created widespread confusion. The people are crying out for able leadership.

The American people feel they are entitled to be told what is going on, short of information that would aid the enemy.

War Production and Scrap Metal in Northern Illinois

In America's production of tanks, guns, ships and munitions, millions of tons of steel are needed. And to meet this demand, the steel mills in this area alone, must have 200 carloads of scrap metal every day.

Here is a chance for every patriotic citizen to contribute to victory. The housewife, business man, farmer and industrialist—all can help by salvaging vital scrap metal.

A casual look around your premises is not enough. A thorough search is necessary to round up all usable scrap metal. Salvage from your home, office and factory every piece of unused and obsolete equipment that you have been saving for a rainy day... because that day is here. And you and every loyal American can help the war production program with all the metal scrap you can find.

The photographs reproduced here show how the companies in the electric system supplying Northern Illinois are answering Uncle Sam's call for scrap metal.

The Girls Scouts held their regular meeting Monday afternoon at the Village Hall.

Jessie L. Mains, Dorothy Robson and Viola and Beverly Powell were among the many that enjoyed the talk given by Dr. Harold E. Henke at the Methodist church in Orland Park Sunday. Dr. Henke's subject was "Church Life in China." He told many interesting stories about the belief and love of religion there and many tales of the people. He is a very good speaker and holds his audience in complete attention and absorption. Besides being an interesting talk, it was also educational and gave all a new insight on how appreciative the people are of any favor and of what good all funds from the China Relief Societies are put to. If a person doesn't have the money to pay for hospital bills or medicine they receive the same treatment thru these Relief Societies. Being in China for almost twelve years, Dr. Henke comes as an authority on the subject. To think that a man there only makes 40c a day and can keep a family of four and in this country that amount would be sneered at, but there they raise the majority of their own food make their own clothes and only wear a certain color so that no one is more dressed up than another. There is no keeping up with the Jones' over there. They tend to their own affairs and would go miles out of their way to keep from saying a nasty remark about someone they know or dislike. All of us here can learn a few things about how to live and think about the other fellow from such a talk as Dr. Henke gave Sunday.

A group of 44 men leave November 6 from the local draft board area in Orland Park. Among the local boys are: Henry Nicholas Kost, Palos Heights; Charles Novak and Bernard Andrew Morgenthaler both from Palos Park and Franklin Everett Loebe of Orland Park. These boys and the other 40 are to report to the Draft Office in Orland above the Creer store at 6:45 a.m. on Nov. 6.

The Rationing Board met at the Village Hall Tuesday and Friday nights. Information on ceiling prices on cost of living items and for the service trades may be had by getting in touch with the local War Price and Rationing Board at that time from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Under the supervision of the board at the present time are the rationing of sugar and preserving sugar, new cars and tires, recapping service, bicycles, typewriters and men's rubber boots and rubber work shoes. Soon fuel oil and gasoline and meats will become a part of the board's activities.

The members of the board would like to urge all who are in need of rationed items to establish their eligibility as soon as possible, before the articles are urgently needed. Drivers who are eligible for recapping service, should be careful to make application and get their certificates before their tires are too far gone to be repaired. There must be some rubber left on the carcass of the tire before it is recapped, or the cords will naturally have been damaged and not fit for recapping. All residents of Palos Township are urged to bring their problems to the board as they develop. The board is set up to serve the public, operating under the national regulations, and welcomes visits from all who need information. The board consists of Joel L. Collins, Roy A. Keys, H. L. Brueggeman, Lester F. Mahafay and Mrs. Frank King, clerk.

Beverly Powell spent one afternoon recently at the home of Sheila Conley.

Mrs. Oscar Strand is spending a few days visiting friends and relatives in Moline, Ill. Sunday her husband and daughter drove down to see the folks. Mrs. Strand of Lemont is taking care of things at home until their return.

Will Kelsey a former resident of Palos Township was a visitor here last week. Will and his brother have purchased a 30 acre farm in Plainfield and will make their permanent home there.

The Red Cross work class met Monday at the village hall.

All schools in Palos were closed Monday due to a Teachers meeting.

County Treasurer John Toman's Pledge to the Taxpayers

HIS RECORD PROVES HE HAS NEVER FAILED THEM.
HIS WORD IS HIS BOND.

When elected Member of the Board of Tax Appeals at the Nov. 3 election, I shall continue my many-year-old open door policy of meeting and serving all of the people.

The Board of Tax Appeals has been established by law for the purpose of giving taxpayers the opportunity of filing complaints on tax bills that, in their judgment appear excessive. I assure you that everyone who comes before me with a complaint will get a fair and impartial hearing and, if the case is justified, I will reduce the taxes.

I especially refer to the small home owner, who, through fear or timidity, hesitates to present his case.

As your County Treasurer for the past four years it was my duty to collect taxes. I had no authority to cut them or accept less than the amount on the tax bill.

As Member of the Board of Tax Appeals, however, the law confers upon me the right to reduce taxes when the case warrants.

JOHN TOMAN,

County Treasurer.

Toman, 20 years an Alderman, 4 years Sheriff and 4 years County Treasurer, has the experience, knowledge and qualifications to handle the office of Board of Appeals. He is endorsed by civic organizations, women's clubs, labor, bankers, business men, real estate brokers and clergy.

SEEK JUSTICE AND EQUITY AMONG GROUPS

A study of the relative distributive shares of national income each year between 1929 and 1941 inclusive, as between compensation of employees on the one hand and agriculture on the other, gives an interesting picture. These figures are taken from information furnished by the Department of Commerce and are in current dollars; that is, they are not adjusted on the basis of the depreciated dollar of late years.

In 1929 the total compensation of employees represented 63.67 per cent of the national income. In 1941 this total compensation represented 68.54 per cent of the national income.

In 1932, while the total compensation of employees was lower, that total represented 79.20 per cent of the national income. The lowest percentage was 63.67, in 1929.

Agriculture's Share.

In 1929, agriculture's share of the national income was 6.21 per cent; in 1941 such share was 6.52 per cent of the national income. Agriculture's lowest ratio was in 1932, when it was 3.78 per cent of the national income, while its highest ratio was in 1935, when it was 7.34 per cent of the national income.

Reducing these 13 years to averages, we find that during the entire period the total compensation of employees has averaged 68.93 per cent of the national income. Agriculture has averaged 5.99 per cent of the national income.

These figures may surprise many of us, both as to the high ratio of national income received by employees and the record of their ability to maintain that ratio in spite of general conditions of depression.

"American Way" Must Be Nurtured. Our American way of life, with its freedom of opportunity and individual liberty, is not a living thing that grows year by year without thought or attention. Just as we cultivate our crops, killing the weeds and exterminating pests which would destroy our harvest, we must constantly nurture our American way of life and constantly seek justice and equity as between various groups.

KEEPING FREIGHT CARS ROLLING

To keep freight cars rolling for war shipments, the railroads must first see to it that the cars are kept fit. The railroads have adopted and consistently carried out a broad-scale program of maintenance and repair, with the result that the percentage of bad-order freight cars is now the lowest in history. This extensive car repair program has not only added to the effective transportation capacity of the nation but, to the extent that it takes less materials to repair an old car than to build a new one, has constituted a very practical measure of conservation in the use of materials.

With the percentage of serviceable freight cars higher than ever before, new operating records have been set in the handling of a record-breaking business. Again, comparison with results in 1918 shows the measure of the improvements which have been made. Comparing current figures for 1942 with those of the same months in 1918, the following facts appear:

The load of the average freight train has been increased by 50 per cent, from 637 tons to 954 tons. The average daily mileage run by each freight locomotive likewise has been increased by 50 per cent, from 65.4 to 97.8 miles.

The average daily volume of service performed by each freight car has been increased by 81 per cent, from 454 to 823 ton-miles.

The average daily distance traveled by each freight car has been increased by 92 per cent, from 22.6 to 43.5 miles.

Highest Levels Yet Attained. All of these 1942 figures reflect the highest levels yet attained in railroad operating efficiency. Through this increased efficiency there has been provided, with fewer locomotives and freight cars and in the face of a volume of traffic never before equalled, a rail service that has met all demands which have been made upon it. In the first half of 1918 there were transportation shortages ranging from 15,000 cars in June to almost 150,000 cars in March. So far this year no car shortages have been reported, and at the end of June there was a surplus of more than 80,000 railroad-owned freight cars in good condition, waiting for loads.

That is the railroad record in the war to date—a record of adequacy and efficiency under the American system of free opportunity and private management. In the words of the Honorable Clarence F. Lea of California:

"In all the world no job is being better done today than by the American railroads."

America's Real Stimulant

A Peruvian statesman, Javier Prado, recently wrote a little book on "The Historical Destinies of the United States". In that book he said: "In the United States, every man's value is determined by his activity, and every man is given the opportunity to develop his abilities. An American's real stimulant and pride consist in being a self-made man, in fighting, and in winning the fight."

Ben Adamowski

It is seldom that a man under 40 is considered mature enough to be a candidate for Congress. Most persons visualize a Congressman as being at least 60 years of age, gray haired with a beard and usually, on the other side of 200 lbs. However, there are exceptions to all popular conceptions, and outstanding among them is the candidacy of Ben Adamowski, who aspires to be the Congressman from our great state.

One might be tempted to ask, who is this 36 year old who is asking the people to send him to Washington?

The young attorney seems to have all the answers, for despite his youth his career is one triumph after the other as a representative of the people.

His first test came shortly after he was admitted to practice law. At 22 he was elected to the State Legislature. During his first term he impressed even seasoned lawmakers with his aggressiveness and his ability to debate the merits of laws on the floor of the house. The young legislator uncovered much shady legislation by insisting on analyzing every law introduced on the floor of the house. He became the idol of the galleries because of his sincere determination to defeat bad legislation and promote favorable laws regardless of party affiliation.

His great work in the house was recognized all over the country, and especially by the voters, for they returned him to the house 5 consecutive terms. The last two terms his colleagues selected him as their floor leader. As such he again was outstanding and won the admiration of members of both houses.

Such a record is certainly the answer to the question that was asked and it is because of this record that the many friends of Mr. Adamowski feel that he will continue to distinguish himself as a lawmaker, especially during these times when the public needs men of high caliber to represent them.

These same friends ask the voters to take Mr. Adamowski into consideration when they go to the polls on November 3.

(See Recipes Below.)

Victory Lunch Box

How's the vim, vigor and vitamin content on the put-up lunches for your school children and defense workers? You may not realize it, but the three "v's" have an important bearing on their intelligence quotient, for good, well balanced food makes both child and adult fit for whatever the day may bring. A poorly nourished body isn't receptive to learning exposure, nor is it capable of meeting the intensive requirements of physical or mental work.

Lunches should pull no punches. Just because they are compact, and it's difficult to have as much variety and hot food as when you are preparing the lunch in your own kitchen, is no reason for skipping over the lunch lightly, in the hope you can make up these shortages at dinner. This meal in the middle of the day should take care of a third of the day's food requirements and as such is not a matter to be considered lightly.

Yes, it's a challenge, homemakers! You may bake the best cake in miles around or turn out a roast that's proud to behold, or a dessert that's purely ambrosial, but if you don't put up a lunch that your child or defense worker husband eats with gusto, you won't get my vote for excellence.

Now, let's get to work! Sandwiches are a standby, but let's make them something more than peanut-butter and jelly or cheese between a couple slices of bread.

Sandwich Ideas.

Sliced or chopped hard-cooked eggs, combined with pickle and moistened with salad dressing.

Sliced tongue or ham with mustard or horseradish.

Liverwurst, mashed and seasoned with catsup.

Chopped ham, chopped hard-cooked eggs, minced green pepper, cooked salad dressing.

Cream cheese, grated yellow cheese, chopped pimiento, chopped green olives, salad dressing to moisten.

Ground corned beef, chopped pickle, and chopped ripe olives blended with mayonnaise.

Peanut butter and honey or cream cheese and honey.

Meat loaf, lettuce, rye bread.

Have a hot dish, too. This makes for top-notch efficiency besides giving the luncheon a hearty and substantial angle that your children or defense-plant husband will welcome.

How to do? Simply use a thermos bottle for soup or a hot drink or unwaxed paper cups and containers for hot foods. Packing the kind of lunch your family can work on should be your aim—an aim, which is fast gaining prominence because hours lost out of the plant or by children from school by illness, mean sabotage on the nutrition front.

LYNN SAYS:

Ideas in a Box: Surprises are as welcome in a lunch box as on a birthday. Try adding a few stuffed prunes (with cream, cheese, honey and peanut butter or dates) just as an extra. It will go over big, as will a few salted nuts, a bit of stuffed celery and whole carrots.

Dress up lunch with a perky salad. They'll like cooked or canned green beans with cooked or canned carrots with lettuce and French dressing. Shredded cabbage with shredded carrots, strips of green pepper, grated carrots, diced pineapple and raisins; canned peas, chopped onion, hard-cooked egg. Devilled eggs are nice, too—with a touch of paprika for color.

Creamed meat or fish in the hollow of a bun which has been scooped out, and the top of the bun held on together with a toothpick is good. Try creamed dried beef, creamed sausages, tuna fish or salmon salad, or creamed stuffed eggs.

This Week's Menu

Lunch Box

- *Vegetable Soup
- Tongue Sandwiches
- *Grated Cheese Sandwiches
- Grated Carrot-Pineapple Salad
- Devilled Eggs
- Fresh Pear
- *Honey Brownies
- *Recipes Given

Do you ever realize how much the family raves over your good home-made vegetable soup? Yes, they do, and it will be especially welcome in the lunch box:

*Vegetable Soup.

- 1 soup bone
- 2 quarts cold water
- 1 cup chopped onion
- 1 cup diced carrots
- 1 cup sliced okra
- 1 cup green beans, cut
- 2 cups diced potatoes
- 2 cups tomatoes

Wash bone and remove all loose, small pieces of bone. Cover with water and let simmer for two hours. Remove bone from broth and cook all vegetables until tender. Season.

Salads make a complete meal of lunch besides providing the day's quota of vitamins. Neatly packed in small, waxed containers salads will retain their original freshness and appeal:

*Vitamin Salad.

- 1½ cups spinach leaves, raw
- 2 tablespoons chopped, mixed pickles
- ½ cup diced celery
- 1 teaspoon chopped onion
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 4 tablespoons mayonnaise
- 1 cup cottage cheese

Add pickles and celery, chopped onion and salt to spinach and mix well. Chill overnight in covered waxed paper container in refrigerator. Pack cottage cheese and mayonnaise in separate small paper containers to serve with spinach mixture.

Bright, fresh, juicy fruits such as oranges, pears, apples, bananas, grapes, individually wrapped in waxed paper will give a lift in the middle of the day. Then for variety's sake you might have a pudding packed in an individual paper container like this one:

Apricot Cream.

(Serves 6)

- 4 egg yolks
- ½ cup sugar
- Juice and rind of 1 lemon
- 2 tablespoons hot water
- ½ cup strained apricot pulp
- 4 egg whites
- 2 tablespoons powdered sugar

Beat egg yolks, add sugar, lemon juice, water and apricot pulp. Cook over hot water until thick. Beat egg whites stiff and add powdered sugar. Fold into cooled, cooked mixture. Place in refrigerator until thick and cold.

Cookies with fruit or puddings polish off the dessert course, and child or plant worker is ready for an afternoon of real "production." Favorite cookies made with honey to keep in tune with the times are:

*Honey Brownies.

(Makes 2 dozen)

- 1 package semi-sweet chocolate chips
- ½ cup shortening
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 6 tablespoons strained honey
- ½ cup sifted flour
- ½ teaspoon baking powder
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 cup chopped nuts

Melt chocolate and shortening over hot water. Cool. Beat eggs until lemon-colored and add honey gradually. Add sifted dry ingredients. Mix in chocolate, add vanilla and nuts. Pour into greased, waxed-paper lined 8 inch square pan. Bake 35 minutes in a moderate (370-degree) oven.

Western Scenery

By
JAMES FREEMAN
Associated Newspapers—WNU Features.

WHEN the county authorities offered to buy Sheriff Seth Crystal an automobile to be used in the exercise of his duty and enable him better to cope with modern bandits, he scorned their offers—and won their animosity. They didn't like his attitude, claimed he wasn't adequately equipped. But no one had yet summoned up enough courage to come out openly and declare that Seth had failed at his job, and demand a change.

Sheriff Crystal hated automobiles. They reminded him of the passing of the old West. He was old, this Sheriff Crystal, a member of the old school of bandit-hunters, somewhat of a sentimentalist, who dreamed of the past and lived in it a great deal, too.

There were rumors that it was time he was retired on a pension. He didn't want to be retired, or he didn't need to be.

But now the worst had happened. The bank at Salt Flats had been robbed, the cashier shot and the bandits escaped in a high-powered car. And Seth—ridiculous as it seemed—had set out to catch them, an hour later, astride his bay mare. Even in the face of such a grave situation there had been those who laughed, for it seemed such an absurd thing to do.

Fifteen miles north of Salt Flats Seth drew in his sweating mount at a point where the road swerved sharply to the left, skirting a rising bluff that eventually merged into the hills above the desert. Directly ahead of him lay Drybed Sink, sun-scorched and shimmering beneath the noonday sun.

He was old, this Sheriff Crystal, a member of the old school of bandit-hunters, somewhat of a sentimentalist, who dreamed of the past and lived in it a great deal, too.

During the winter months the floor of Drybed Sink was covered occasionally with water, rendering travel by horses or machine an impossibility because of the soft, oozy mud. But during the other nine months the bottom became baked hard by the sun, presenting a flat, smooth surface of a solidity strong enough to withstand the pressure of a dozen trucks at once. The sink served as a crosscut at these times for travelers wishing to reach the town of Morton, where the railroad passed through.

Seth urged his mare down onto the sink floor and settled into the saddle for the ten-mile ride beneath the broiling July sun. As he advanced a mirage, representing a cooling expanse of lake water, receded before him not 100 yards distant. The mirage had never failed to fascinate Seth. And today, despite the gravity of his thoughts, he watched it with as much interest as ever. Nothing had seemed more real, not even Lake Michigan, on which he had once gazed from a high promontory, years ago. Natives of the vicinity liked to bring tourists out to Drybed Sink just to hear their exclamations of incredulity. Many of them refused to believe the lake was not genuine until they had been taken down into the sink and shown.

Ordinarily Seth might have reflected on these amusing incidents, but today he was thinking of something more important. He was wondering what he'd say when those in charge down at the county seat accused him of being incompetent and condemned him for not bringing back the bandits. They'd say he didn't have a chance, because being without an automobile he wasn't on an equal footing with the bandits, and what would his answer be?

Seth didn't know why he kept on the trail. Possibly he had hopes of picking up a clue in Morton that might lead to something. But at best the outlaws would reach the railroad town shortly after noon, and pass through it. It was maddening, in a way, to think of the speed with which they could travel, maddening, and yet even now Seth refused to bow to the encroachment of a new West and the passing of the old. Somehow—out here—automobiles and such had no place. It was a man's country, and whether or not a man survived in it shouldn't depend on man-made machines. It didn't seem right.

Toward three o'clock Seth rode up the northern slope of the sink and came onto the road that spilled down out of the hills and stretched away in the distance to Morton. He paused to rest, again wondering just what he'd say when he reached the town, knowing full well that he'd appear a little ridiculous as he explained his mission and told of how the bank robbers had escaped.

The mare was close to exhaustion, but she moved unhesitatingly ahead when Seth picked up the reins. They plodded on for 100 yards or more, then Seth abruptly sat erect on his saddle and pulled in. Behind him unmistakably, he heard the roar of a motor. It was coming down the road, out of the hills.

Without knowing why, yet conscious of a vague hope, Seth urged the mare behind a clump of mesquite, and waited. Presently a car emerged into the flat country and roared toward him. Seth's heart thumped. The car contained three men, and its description fitted nicely with the one given him of the hold-up machine.

Seth reached down to his hip and drew forth the long-barreled, antiquated six-shooter that had been his boon companion for nearly half a century. Holding the perfectly balanced weapon in his right hand, he picked up the reins with the left and sat crouched a little forward in his saddle.

The car came on, its speed reducing as it struck the loose sand of the desert country. Seth could see its occupants' faces quite plainly. Unconsciously he chuckled at their expressions of annoyance at having their speed impeded.

Seth waited until the car had approached within twenty-five feet of the mesquite clump, then drove his spurs and let out a yip. The mare lunged forward, directly in the path of the oncoming vehicle.

The reaction of the driver was natural. Instinctively he swerved to avoid a collision, automatically applying the brakes. The machine's front wheels struck the loose sand, and lurched, throwing the occupants of the car against the windshield.

Seth quieted the mare with a word and a slight tug on the reins. He sat very straight and still in his saddle, watching the men in the car gravely, the old-fashioned six-shooter held on a level with his hip.

From the car's front seat came a steady flow of cursing and groans. Presently one of the men disentangled himself, sat up, saw Seth sitting there and without thinking reached inside his coat toward a shoulder holster. The six-shooter in Seth's hand roared and leaped. The bandit shrieked and looked down at his shattered wrist in blank dismay.

"An' now," said Seth gently, "you three coyotes climb down outer that ottomobeel and start walking. It's only three miles to Morton, an' the exercise will do you good. I ain't got no use for ottomobeels anyhow."

An hour later Seth had lodged his three prisoners in the jail at Morton and was seated in the cool of the evening on the veranda of the town's rooming house. A group of citizens was crowding about, clamoring for details of the arrest, expressing amazement at the rapidity with which the sheriff had captured the perpetrators of the worst hold-up and robbery in the county's history.

But Seth answered only vaguely. He was thinking of tomorrow when he would ride astride a horse into Salt Flats with his prisoners; he was thinking of the expressions of incredulity that would most certainly appear on the faces of the county authorities, and of their embarrassment at thus having their plans to pension him off frustrated.

Once he chuckled. No need, he thought, to mention the mirage. Let 'em guess how he did it. They were too stupid to realize that the bandits were city men and hence, upon seeing the mirage that had fooled even Westerners, had naturally believed it real and taken the winter road through the hills, that was five miles longer.

Wiesbaden, Once Famous Spa, Attacked by RAF

Bombing of Wiesbaden by the RAF focuses attention on one of Germany's most famous spas. Manufacture of surgical instruments and the production of cement are important industries in normal times, but the city is best known for its medicinal baths.

During the season, from April to October, thousands of visitors sought relief from various ailments. This influx doubled the city's normal population of 100,000. The range of ills included gout, rheumatism, and neuralgia. Shrinkage of oversize waists was a major objective, according to a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

Baths with all the trimmings were readily available—sand, mud, hot air, electricity, and steam—or the health seeker could revel in the simplicity of an old-fashioned tub immersion. Mineral mists were provided for those who wanted to "bathe" their lungs. Lounging rooms were a characteristic feature of the bath houses.

Although Wiesbaden thrived on the ills of the flesh, it was also a center for sports lovers. Easy access to the forests and vineyards of the Rhine valley invited hikers and automobile tourists. The number of players on its golf courses and tennis courts was evidence of the city's appeal to the able-bodied.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Rubber is not the sap of a tree, but is the latex found in tubes that run lengthwise throughout the inner part of the bark.
Individual car owners can conserve rubber. Never drive over 35 miles an hour, check inflation pressure once a week, check wheel alignment every six months, rotate tires (including spares) to different wheels every 5,000 miles. It's not a difficult habit to acquire and it will keep you rolling longer.
Why balk at 35 miles an hour restriction? In Jerusalem 8 miles an hour is the limit for automobiles, with the speed warnings printed in Arabic, Hebrew and English.
The Army is supplied by hundreds of thousands of rubber-tired trucks, just one of which for a 2½-ton vehicle, takes more than 7 times as much rubber as your passenger car.
Pontoon bridges are built on rubber floats that take more than a ton and a half of rubber.

New Respect for The Business Man

"The American system of private enterprise is demonstrating its unlimited capacity and utility in this period of the nation's greatest need," says Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange.

"As a result," he continues, "there is developing in America a new respect for the business man and industrialist; in fact, for all those who know how to produce the things which are so urgently needed to win the war."

The test of the American system, Mr. Schram concludes, has been the creation of more and more wealth and not the dissipation or confiscation of existing wealth. This is the philosophy we must defend. It is the fundamental premise of the government we are struggling to uphold.

Plastics for Jewelry

"There will be a new note in costume jewelry soon. Priorities are claiming the base metals that are the backbone of this industry. Gold and silver we have in abundance, but to take the place of tin, brass and copper, we will use plastics, wood and enamel as metal substitutes. Already the plastics are appearing in better costume jewelry."

THE WINNING COMBINATION

"History may well establish the fact that the second world war was won because, backing up the valor and skill and sacrifices of the armed forces, were the unparalleled experience and production ability of American industry, as typified by the great industrial organizations which have characterized American enterprise and made its industrial development the envy of the entire world."—Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., chairman of General Motors.

What History Will Say About The Farm Program

In 1939-40 the agricultural program cost the United States almost a billion dollars. More than half this amount was for conservation payments. The next largest item was for parity payments, amounting to 215 million dollars. The cost of administration averaged about 7 per cent of the payments.

Out of the farm program grew the now familiar term "ever-normal granary." The 1942 year book of the Encyclopedia Britannica gives a preview of what history will say about that ever-normal granary and its effect on our rural economy; a chance "to see ourselves as others see us." Here is what the year book says: "As a relief measure for farmers, cash payments no doubt raised the standard of living of many farmers relative to the rest of the U. S. These payments were much needed and gratefully received. They were the farm counterpart of city relief cheques. However, unlike city relief, farm payments were given in proportion to reduction in production rather than in proportion to needs.

Failure of Price Raising. "One of the effects of the AAA program of reducing production was to raise prices. However, raising prices by reducing production did not raise farm income. Prices and production tended to be compensating factors; that is, a large crop at low prices brought about as many dollars as a small crop at high prices. Another effect of reducing production and raising prices in the United States was to encourage high-cost producers in other countries to increase production. Thus the program tended to turn U. S. foreign markets over to foreign producers. To regain these foreign markets, the American farmer could eliminate this foreign competition only by selling his product at unremunerative prices for several years."

An avowed advantage of the ever-normal granary has been to carry part of large production in good crop years over into poor crop years. However, in the case of cotton, this was formerly done by farmers and the trade. In the case of grains, the excesses of good years were carried over into following crop years largely in the form of livestock. When grain was plentiful and relatively cheap, it was profitable to feed more to the existing livestock.

How Farmers Met the Problem. "With continued good crops, the numbers of livestock continued large; but, when short crops occurred, feeding was no longer profitable and the slaughter of livestock temporarily increased, thereby reducing the number. During drought years, the livestock produced from current poor crops necessarily declined, but the deficiency was made up from the slaughter of the excess accumulated during the good crop years. Thus farmers tended to operate their own ever-normal granary. They kept the grain in the form of meat animals rather than in corn cribs and grain elevators. In many ways, the farmer's system was preferable to the AAA system because the surplus was kept in a form more quickly available to city consumers and for emergencies, such as additional foreign demands in time of war."

In view of the cost of our all-out effort to win this war, are these AAA expenditures now necessary? Our answer to this question may have some bearing on what our grandchildren think of our good judgment. Why not buy war bonds with these checks?
